One Hundred Years Of Solitude Gabriel Garci A Marquez
The novel opens with Aunt Polly scouring the house in search of her nephew, Tom Sawyer. She finds him in the closet, discovers that his hands are covered with jam, and prepares to give him a whipping. Tom cries out theatrically, “Look behind you!” and when Aunt Polly turns, Tom escapes over the fence. After Tom is gone, Aunt Polly reflects ruefully on Tom’s mischief and how she lets him get away with too much.

Tom comes home at suppertime in a raucous mood. He wants to tell her all about his adventures. During supper, Aunt Polly inquires about his school that afternoon and how many books he read. Tom rattles off his report card and shows her that his record is still good. Aunt Polly is satisfied, but she tells Tom that he must be skipping school that afternoon and never return to the house. Tom’s heart sinks. Aunt Polly is about to leave the house, and Tom has sworn to disguise himself to bypass her.

Tom goes out of the house into the alley. He sees a cluster of boys gathered under a streetlight. While wander- ing the streets of St. Petersburg, Tom and the new arrival engage in a game of hide and seek. Tom eventually chooses the new comer as the way home.

When he returns home in the evening, Tom finds Aunt Polly waiting for him. She notices his dirtied clothes and resolves to make him work the next day, a Saturday, as punishment.

On Saturday morning, Aunt Polly sends Tom out to whitewash the fence. Jim passes by, and Tom tries to get him to do some of the whitewashing in return for a “white ally,” a kind of mustard. Jim almost agrees, but Aunt Polly appears and chased him off, leaving Tom alone with his task.

Aunt I asked him if he had been skipping school that afternoon and Tom said yes, but Aunt I was still angry. Aunt I said that if Tom was caught skipping school, Tom would be whipped. Tom was surprised that Aunt I was so strict.

Tom went out of the house into the street, wandering the streets of St. Petersburg, doing nothing, twirling a top, and whistling. While wandering, Tom met his friend, Huckleberry Finn. Tom and Huckleberry Finn talked for a while, and eventually Huckleberry Finn offered to take Tom on a treasure hunt. Tom accepted and was excited.
